Agenda

• Define and differentiate management and leadership

• Identify specific communication strategies for engaging in meaningful leadership communication with both direct reports and leaders
• Define your own leadership brand – what do you want to be known for as it relates to leadership communication?

Management and Leadership: Skills or Roles?

- The manager asks how and when; the leader asks what and why.
- The manager focuses on systems and structure; the leader focuses on people.
- The manager’s eye is always on the bottom line; the leader’s eye is on the horizon.
- The manager relies on control; the leader inspires trust.
- The manager does things right; the leader does the right thing. (Bennis, 1989)
Followers Face Challenges, Too

- A leader’s main job is to inspire others to follow him or her – and to recognize the unique set of demands and challenges followers face:
  - Followers have obligations to multiple stakeholders.
  - Followers must obey orders and directives, even ones they don’t like.
  - Followers have much less legitimate power to draw on, and are often left out of the loop.
  - Followers must express dissent in an “appropriate” way and to the "right" person.
  - Followers need the courage and skills to deliver bad news upwards. (Johnson, 2012)

3 Goals of Communication

1. Instrumental goals – achieve a goal, complete a task (duPre, 2014)

2. Relational goals – maintain effective, trusted relationships (West & Turner, 2007)

3. Identity goals – maintain consistency with how we [want to] see ourselves and live our values (Mead, 1934)

- We are often trying to achieve all of these goals in a single interaction – or we should be.

Bringing People Together: Framing & the Power of Language

- Framing involves the ability to shape the meaning of a subject, to define its character and significance through the meanings we include and exclude, as well as those we emphasize when communicating (Fairhurst, 2011).

Framing: 5 Core Framing Tasks

1. Develop a collective sense of goals, objectives, and strategies
2. Instill knowledge of the organization’s environment and its work
3. Generate enthusiasm, confidence, optimism, cooperation, and trust
4. Encourage flexibility in decision-making and change
5. Construct and maintain a meaningful organizational identity

Activity: Mental Model & Framing Analysis

“I live in a world of uncertainty. I’m not naïve any longer…I come in the morning now and I’m a skeptic. I say, ‘Okay, first tell me about all of the casualties, I want to set priorities. What are the things that might take us out of business today?’ I’m not being wise, I’m being a realist…Right now we’re wrestling with keeping two boilers up and running…We got a game plan and we try to set a course of direction, but then I live with the reality of the situation. I go back Monday and the boiler is down — so how do we address this problem?

You really have to be nimble of foot here, you’ve got to be able to react, you don’t know what’s going to be thrown at you. You try to prepare yourself for the unexpected, and with a number of eyes looking ahead with me, maybe we’ll see a few of the potholes that are approaching us…If you look at the plant, the plant itself is like a rickety old car with band aids and rubber bands.”

From Cunliffe, 2004

• Set team, project or unit direction
• Monitor the performance of direct reports
• Others?

Tactical Communication Strategies for Everyday Leadership

• Be physically present
  – Practice MBWA: “Management by Walking Around”
• Ask authentic questions
• Provide context
  – Help your followers understand the “Why” not just the “What” and “When” of their daily work
• Recognize and acknowledge emotions
• Structure meetings for interaction and information/resource sharing
What’s Your Style?

• What does your team need?
• What do individual members need from you?
